Week 37

Now that you know what factors to look for when researching a market, let's dig into some research!

You may have already selected your market, but as you grow your business, you'll need to be able to fully understand how to research a market. Use the tools you learned last week to complete this activity.

1. Research 3 different markets

|                                      | Market 1:_____ | Market 2:_____ | Market 3:_____ |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------|--------------------|--------------------|
| Population growth?                   |                    |                    |                    |
| Average income?                      |                    |                    |                    |
| Employment rate?                     |                    |                    |                    |
| Upcoming commercial investment?      |                    |                    |                    |
| Upcoming government infrastructures? |                    |                    |                    |
| Rental vacancy rate?                 |                    |                    |                    |
| Schools, amenities, transportation?  |                    |                    |                    |
| Tenant profile?                      |                    |                    |                    |
| Gentrification?                      |                    |                    |                    |

Which of these markets would you choose? Why?

2. Ask the community!

Ask your community and record the answers here:

- What driving stats in a market do you look for? What resources do you use? What market do you invest in? Why?
